that once obscured the merits of good Butterine have happily passed away. The sunshine of intelligence and knowledge has dispelled the ignorant and wrong impressions. Unscrupulous and unskilled makers of butterine were in part respousible for the prejudice by flooding the market with unworthy butterine. Now that Alderney CREAMERY BUTTERINE has won the market completely, and is fast driving out the cheap, inferior grades, the people have found that good butterine is a blessing, not a curse. Alderney Creamery Butterine rests upon the tables of many of the clite. They don't hesitate to tell their friends of its excellence, purity, fine bouquet, and reliable qualities. And it costs less than butter at the

There will be a revolution in the ways and means of charity if it can be effected by the Board of Trade. Any movement inaugurated by and pushed by this body commands attention, and in addition to this The Times was early in the field this season arging speedy provision and ef-fective means for the relief of the poor this

About a week ago Mr. F. L. Moore, chair man of the committee on charities of the Board of Trade, invited a representative of the Baltimore Charity Organization to Washington, who addressed a number of those interested in improving the present methods of providing for the indigent

Chairman Moore, however, touched the keynote of the situation when he said that the people of Washington were tired of in-discriminate giving. It was evident, he said, that the free hand gifts of the people in money and supplies were only a temporary makeshift. That such a policy, without some means of educating the beneficiaries up to the idea that they should give what they could in return for pecuniary or provisional ald, only tended to keen give what they could in return for pecuniary or provisional aid, only tended to keep paupers in poverty and ensure an annual return to the city of the unworthy recipients, who enjoyed well intended but questionably applied means of relief. These, however, are applied means of relief. These, however, are matters of detail.

In the early part of this year there was some talk of reorganizing the supervision of charities as provided by law. The talk at that time was quite above board that the office of superintendent of charities could be dispensed with.

BOARD OF CHARITIES.

Mr. Moore said that it was the intention of the committee to have the charities supervised by a board; and that it would supervised by a board; and that it would be a good plan to have on such board members of the directors of the principal charitable institutions of the city.

It was stated that to carry out this plan Congressional action would be necessary, and it is understood that a bill to that end will be submitted to Congress at the approaching session.

As at present intended, the board is to consist of ten members, with a salaried secretary. The bill carries with it the abolition of the office of superintendent of charities, now held by Col. John Tracey, at an annual salary of $3,000.

The board must be composed of citizens of Washington, Col. Tracey having been appointed under a law which expressly provided that the appointee should be a non-resident.

These questions will be further consid-
